

CONSERVE WHITNEY PARK FOR ALL TIME

Existing Round Lake and Whitney Wilderness areas, pictured here, will benefit from conserving the adjacent 36,000-acres of Whitney Park, now up for sale.

Whitney Park is again up for sale. 36,000 acres in Long Lake, the geographic heart of the Park and 40 more lakes are at risk of subdivision and development.

*“Open space and ecological values of properties of this size and containing these resources diminish rapidly as they are subdivided.”
– Adirondack Park Agency Permit Findings, Whitney Park, 1996.*

In 1997 Governor Pataki rallied us to protect a portion of Whitney Park. Now, Governor Cuomo must finish the job and rally New Yorkers to remove all of Whitney Park from the threat of large-scale fragmentation. Ask him to employ conservation easements to finally conserve the entire property and strategically add to the current 30,000-acre Whitney and Round Lake Wilderness Areas.

Failure is not an option for a property so central to the ecological integrity of the entire Adirondack Park.

Concerned about the future of Whitney Park?

Write to Governor Andrew Cuomo at www.governor.ny.gov and phone DEC Commissioner Basil Seggos at 518-402-8545.
Ask them to conserve Whitney Park for all time.
